Monica and Ruprecht have successfully entered the lair of their enemies: the Order of the Golden Crescent. Disguised as members of the order, they are warily searching for answers. But the Victorian sensibilities of their “hosts” make it difficult for them to speak unsupervised under almost any circumstances, and Monica finds herself pretending to be someone else while utterly alone with her uncertain feelings. Separated, they both wait on the arrival of the Order's leader – whose arrival will mean answers, whether they are good or bad.
